Back Home.

She was an odd-looding little old woman in a skimpy and faded black alpaca dress and a big, old-fashioned black bonnet with some limp black feathers and faded ribbon on it. But her small and deeply-wrinkled old face had a kindly look and her blue eyes were as bright and twinkling as the eyes of a child.

child.

She talked to every person near her on the train and the burden of it all was that she was "going back home,"

"Just think of it," she said in her cracked, childish voice: "It'll be fifty years next May, the 10th day, since I lear my old home in New Hampshire, an' I ain't never been back since, an' here when I want away I reckgned sure here when I went away I reckoned sure I'd get back once in four or five years, anyhow, but I ain't never went until now, and it'll be fifty years the 10th of next May. I was married on the 9th an' me an' Aaron, he's my husband, started for the West the very next day. Aaron said I should come home in two years but our first baby was born about that time, an' I couldn't come then, an, somehow or other, there wa'nt no time after that when I could come. But I ain't blamin' Aaron. He'd been willin' for me to come if I could of got off. Aaron, he's been back twice. It was easier for him to discuss the said and got an estimate if you need ANY. next May. I was married on the 9th been back twice. It was easier for him to git away than fer me.

"I'll find changes? La, yes. There's "I'll find changes? La, yes. There's skasly anyone left that I know, but I've got an own sister and a brother who'll be glad to see me. An' the old house I was born in is still standin'. I know jist how it looks. Some things'll be jist as natchrel. There don't nobody know how glad I'll be to git back home.

I'll be home in the morning. Here you, Mr. Porter, mind that you git me up airly. But, la me, I ain't likely to oversleep so nigh home."

oversleep so nigh home.'

But she was not awake in the morning when all of the other passengers were up and dressed. The porter called her, but there was no response, and one of the ladies in the car parted the curtains of the old lady's berth and stepped back with a frightened look, saying in a whisper:

"She is dead!"

Against a Classical Education.

"Life is not poetry or a dream. It is action. If a young man is required to HAVE SEVERAL take the classics to the exclusion of what I call practical studies the thing is overdone. I do not object to an elective course in the classics. If the young man chooses from his natural tastes to study Latin or Greek let him do so, but I ask: Does any young man study the classics that he may have a good time talking Greek or Latin in practical life? In the middle ages there was an excuse for the classics, because learning was locked up in the dead languages. I ask those present who had a thorough drill in the classics cause learning was locked up in the dead languages. I ask those present who had a thorough drill in the classics what they have left from it to-day? Who can think in Latin among you? If you can't think in Latin among you? If you can't think in the language you can't get the beauty of it. The beauty you get is an English beauty. Now, why not get this beauty in the tongue we learned at our mother's knee? My idea is that instead of taking a young man and making him spendhalf his time studying something he can use. Are there not as good things in the English tongue as there ever in the English tongue as there ever to were in Latin or Greek? If I had been treated rightly by my alma mater I could read German and French to-day. What a benefit that would have been to a young man thrown out to earn his living. Demosthenes' "De Corona" bears no comparison to Burke's speeches, or Webster's or Choate's. I had to explore the beautiful realms of English literature after I left college. What little of science I know I have since acquired. I have no quarrel with the classics, but I deplore the fact that so much time is given them to the exclusion of what is better. Let us not turn out helpless babies from the college doors, but full-grown men ready to be and to do."—Judge Collins.

JACKSON DID FIGHT ON SUNDAY .- To a statement that "Stonewall" Jackson would never travel nor fight on Sunday, the Oxford, Maine Advertiser replies: "We think the surviving members of the old Tenth Maine regiviving members of the old Tenth Maine regiment can recall to memory Sunday, the 25th day of May, 1862, almost three decades, when old Stonewall traveled and fought on Sunday, and had our fearless and stalwart on the run from Winchester to Williamsport. How that rebel battery got the drop on us when a few miles from Winchester, and what a terrifying sound those scorching shells gave as they came whizzing through the air so near, and what a shower of knapsacks followed about that time, and with what sad hearts, we parted with photographs, letters and clothing from home, as we flung them away and passed on. That forced march was a trying ordeal to the men, and some of them carry the effects to this day."
